

Jaime Lee Bull is a board-certified Physician Assistant at WakeMed Bariatric Surgery & Weight Loss in NC with clinical interests in bariatric surgery, robotics, medical weight management, as well as research focused on bariatric procedures and resolution/improvement of diabetes and other comorbid conditions. She received her master's in physician assistant practice from Campbell University and bachelor's degree in clinical research from University of North Carolina at Wilmington. She is currently serving as the Integrated Health President for the Bariatric Society of the Carolinas. This year she received her FASMBS-IH designation from the American Society of Metabolic and Bariatric Surgery.

Jaime believes that the patient always comes first. She enjoys establishing long-term relationships with patients, celebrating their successes, and providing support if they are struggling. Working in bariatric medicine, Jaime feels that she is afforded the opportunity to be a part of a patient's health transformation. She overall enjoys helping people live healthier and happier lives.

As a Bariatric APP and Integrated Health Professional, Jaime is passionate in ensuring patients receive safe, effective surgical and non-surgical options while hoping to eliminate and discourage weight bias in our communities. Additionally, she hopes to continue in aiding other IH Professionals in obtaining and maintaining designations and educational opportunities that truly embody our skills and expertise.
